Night Shift ON THE FOOD FRONT

THEY DID IT BEFORE—
THEY CAN DO IT AGAIN
With Farmall Tractor Power

Turnover the Spring, from the Rockies to the Atlantic seaboard, worried farmers searched the skies for signs of clear weather, but the cold rains fell relentlessly.

For more than a month the seed should have been germinating in the warm soil. Millions of acres lay unplanted because the ground was too wet for preparation of the seed bed and too cold for germination of the seed.

Only a generation ago there could have been but one outcome—crop shortage and food scarcity. Farmers allowed count time for planting when the warm sun waits till late May or June before drying the soggy soil. Harvests are too slow and the too quickly to get the job done then.

But the farmers remember May of 1945—only two years ago—when their fast, smiling tractors averted crop failure. Then, too, rains flooded the fields and the month was all but spent before they could get in on the land and plant.

In 1945, most farmers drove their tractors from dark to dark, and longer. Many planted around the clock, working in two or three shifts. They made one of the greatest crops in history.

In today's war-world world—with hunger and disease already stalking many peoples—even one major crop failure could bring famine. This is why the sound of tractors and plowing machinery was heard, day and night, from the Plains states to the Eastern seaboard—why headlamps stabbed the darkness over the fields.

America's farmers are doing it again, in spite of an unprecedented combination of adverse circumstances—bad weather, shortages of machines and shortages of manpower. For the second time in three years, they are relying upon their tractor-powered machines to help rescue large areas of the world from catastrophe. Most of these tractors are products of International Harvester than of any other company.
